

RICK FREEDMAN

As Director for Project and Program Management at AdamsGabbert, Rick Freedman consults with clients as a trainer, agile coach, and senior program manager. Rick has over twenty-five years of Director-level experience at firms such as Intel, NEC, Citicorp, and Dun & Bradstreet. He's been a consultant at Cap Gemini and Siemens Business Services, and for Microsoft, HP, BP, Sprint, Cisco, SEGA, and The People's Republic of China. Rick is a hands-on, agile-focused project manager fluent in both business and technical issues, and combines strategy and tactical expertise to ensure client engagements are delivered successfully.

Rick is the author of three books on IT professional services, including "The IT Consultant" and "Building the IT Consulting Practice", both Amazon top sellers, and has developed the Agile Project Management course presented worldwide by ESI International. Rick's regular columns on TechRepublic.com are read by over 30,000 site members a month.

Rick was the top graduating student from the Data Processing Science class of 1984 at Kingsborough College in Brooklyn. Rick is a Certified Scrum Master.

Away from the office, Rick contributes articles on IT topics to various trade sites, and supports Operation Breakthrough, helping children who are living in poverty develop to their fullest potential by providing them a safe, loving, and educational environment.
